

I feel that the NAB's arguments regarding the inability of non-local entities to provide local programming like weather and traffic are ironic and hypocritical as they promote large conglomerates which also have little local interest. This two-faced approach serves their interest in protecting their established market while reducing the benefit to consumers who are increasingly served watered-down and homogenized content. Radio needs more competition, not less.